

Indonesian Commission against Terrorist's One Whole Year of Wire-Tapping

The Commissioner of the National Commission on Human Rights or Komnasham, Mohammad Choirul Anam, has opposed the idea of allowing the police to conduct wire-tapping to allegedly terrorists for a whole year long. He said Monday (on 16 April) that the law on terrorism should, indeed, be amended.

Mentioning that the length was not reasonable, he said that it did not picture or represent the so-called law enforcement.

He also said that the worst thing of the Article 31/3 of the bill on terrorism was that the length to conduct wire-tapping to allegedly terrorists could even be extended up to maximum another one year.

In the on-going process of deliberating the bill on terrorism, an alleged terrorist may be arrested and detained for the first 14 days, and then another seven days. Tragically, the police are also permitted to bug his phone for a whole year long.

To Choirul Anam, all of these things are ridiculous in the sense of the so-called legal approach context. The length of wire-tapping is not only violating human rights, but it is also illogical.
